

Investment Weekly

For the week ended June 28, 2024

Commentary

- U.S. equities ended mostly higher although midcaps were down. Technology led while more defensive sectors fell. Value underperformed growth. Europe and the U.K. fell while Japan and emerging markets rose.
- Treasury yields mostly rose as the yield curve steepened, pushing corporate bonds lower.
- The dollar and gold were little changed.
- The Fed's preferred inflation measure, core PCE inflation, was in line with consensus. April's reading was revised slightly upward. The annual rate was down to the lowest level since March 2021, and more in line with what the Fed is looking for to cut rates. Personal spending growth was weaker as personal income increased.
- Initial jobless claims stayed elevated. June consumer confidence was as expected as inflation expectation fell.
- On housing, May new home sales missed, although April sales were revised upward. May pending home sales fell but the market was expecting sales to rise.
- 1Q24 earnings: Of the 100% of S&P companies that reported through 6/21, the earnings growth rate was 8.1%. The revenue growth rate was 3.9%. 79% of S&P companies reported above consensus earnings while 61% surpassed sales expectations.
